

YOU KNOW YOU'RE A DRUIDAWN KID IF MANY OF THESE APPLY TO YOU:

You're more comfortable in your imaginary world than the real world, and sometimes you have to be reminded which one is which.

Your best friend is a dragon... no, a real one! But you're the only person who can see him.

You've seen Monty Python and the Holy Grail more times than you can count and you quote it daily.

Your Magic the Gathering or Pokemon Cards are more valuable than your family's car... no, really! Want to see them NOW?

You often spend so many hours playing your favorite video or computer game that you forget to go to the bathroom until it's too late.

Personal hygiene is not exactly your strong suit.

You're a Whedonist. If you don't know what this means, you're not old enough yet, but fear not, you'll find your way there all by yourself.

You use big words when you speak, like "ironically" and "fascinating" and "incidentally" but you don't have a clue how to spell them.

You hate writing because your ideas are complex and extraordinary but your ability to get them onto paper is frustratingly limited. OR...

You're a great writer and you're passionate about your work. You're in the middle of writing five novels at once. Sadly, you've never written the words "The End" before... Ever.

You have a Lord of the Rings replica of some kind or a poster of the movie on your wall.

You've been to a bookstore at midnight to get a copy of the new Harry Potter book the day before it's released and missed school the next day because of it.

You've been to a video game store at midnight to get a copy of the newest Halo, Oblivion, or Drake's Uncharted the day before it's released and missed school the next day because of it.

You've been to a movie theater at midnight to see the newest fantasy film the day before it's released and missed school the next day because of it.

You've had no real excuse at all to skip school the next day. You just simply weren't interested in going.

You are home schooled because conventional schooling never has and never will interest you.

You have a passion for superheroes and you often ask people the question... "If you had a super power, what would it be?" in hopes that they'll give you the best super power idea ever so that when the aliens finally land and they offer to grant you a wish, you'll totally be ready! This one also works in case you find a genie in a bottle or manage to catch a leprechaun during your family trip to Ireland.

You still play with the Star Wars Legos you've had for years. They just never get old!

When you grow up you want to be the almighty ruler of the universe... Why not? You'd be better at it than anyone else!

Your favorite sport is finding flaws in other people's ideas.

Who says evil super-geniuses can't love cute furry animals? You own several cute furry things and you like them better than people!

Your mother is the true evil super-genius in your house. She made you clean your room recently. She couldn't understand why this should be so difficult for you. Oh the tears, the agony! Inflicting such torture upon innocent, brilliantly creative children should be punishable by life imprisonment.

Organization is highly overrated. You know where everything is, and you like it that way!

There is a method to your madness!

Your PE teacher is the other evil super-genius in your life. Torture by humiliation works amazingly well.

You have a legendary sense of humor. You crack yourself up on a regular basis.

People are always laughing at the things you say, even when you don't mean to be funny.

Listening is not your strong suit, so when people tell you jokes, sometimes it takes a while to get the humor; you may find yourself laughing days after you were told something funny.

Sometimes your sense of humor gets you into trouble... like when you're being lectured about your bad behavior at school and the teacher's hair reminds you of a style Princess Leia made famous. Wrong time to be cracking yourself up!
